Director F/LS
James J. Corrigan

Jim Corrigan, 60, of Little Neck, LI, was a New York firefighter for 25 years, retiring as Captain of Engine 10 in 1994. He was the Director of Fire and Life Services for the World Trade Center Complex. On September 11, with 3 other fire safety directors, he rushed to the day care center to evacuate the children. All of the children and only one of these courageous men survived the collapse of the building.

FSD
Lawrence F. Boisseau

Lawrence Boisseau, 36, of Freehold, NJ, was a fire safety director at the World Trade Center since 1993. On Sept. 11, he helped knock out the windows of a ground-floor day care center at the Trade Center. That done, he was directed to go to the command post on the ground floor of the South Tower. There, he helped direct fleeing office workers and firefighters before the South Tower collapsed.

FSD
Richard P. Fitzsimons

Richard Fitzsimons, 57, of Lynbrook, LI, was a fire safety director at the World Trade Center, where he conducted drills and planned evacuations. He had just completed evacuating the children from the day care center and was last seen heading toward a sub-basement in the World Trade Center to assist in the rescue effort.

FSD
Philip T. Hayes

Philip T. Hayes, 67, East Northport, LI., was a New York firefighter in Engine 217 from 1959 to 1979. He had worked as a fire safety director at the World Trade Center since 1995. On September 11, he rescued children from the day care center in 5 World Trade Center. Then, as debris fell from the sky, he ran into the south tower to redirect people out of harm's way.

FSD
William X. Wren

Bill Wren, 61, of Lynbrook, LI, was a New York firefighter in Ladder 166 for 25 years. In 1993, having retired three years earlier, took the job as fire safety in the World Trade Center. Bill and a small group of fire safety workers rushed to tower five to assist in the evacuation of a day care center there. Then, Bill and the others, headed back to the south tower.

FSD
Robert J. Mayo

Robert Mayo, 46, of Marlboro, NJ, was a fire safety director at the World Trade Center. Stationed in Building 4, he successfully helped evacuate that structure. He was last seen in the lobby of the North Tower shortly before it collapsed, working to keep calm and order as he helped evacuate thousands of people from the building.
